Creativity has shaped my life from an early age, becoming the language through which I explore and interpret the world. Living with dyslexia taught me resilience and fostered a unique artistic perspective that continues to influence my work. After my drawing The Peaceful Anacaona was selected for inclusion in a portfolio following a competition in England, I went on to study

Graphic Design at the Miami International University of Art & Design. Since returning to Haiti in 2014, I have developed a mixed-media painting practice that combines layered textures and materials to express memory, identity, and emotion. Through my work, I invite viewers to reflect on the beauty, complexity, and resilience of the human experience.
